The rail line snakes through scenic and thrilling natural terrain. The whole train, hugging the mountainside at a dizzy height over raging river far below, creeps over the World War II rail line laid on creaking wood trestles. The Death Railway train ride runs on a regular schedule. The train leaves Kanchanaburi station at 10.31 am; chugs over the Bridge on River Kwai at 10.35 am or thereabout, en route Namtok Station at 12.30 pm. We also take you to visit The Tiger Temple or Wat Pha Luang Ta Bua, which is a Theravada Buddhist temple and has been a sanctuary for many endangered animals including several tigers that walk around freely once a day and can be petted by tourists. The temple received several tiger cubs where the mothers had been killed by poachers. As of 2007, over 21 cubs have been born at the temple and the total number of tigers is about 12 adult tigers and 4 cubs. The tigers are tamed by being fed with cooked meat to avoid giving them a taste for blood. The staff keeps the tigers under control and the abbot will intervene if the tiger gets agitated. They are treated as family members in the temple and visitors are asked to give a donation if they want to take photos with the tigers.
